The most memorable stories I can think of in my time playing handball was finally being able to compete against the big dogs of the court.

I got into handball early on in middle school because my school didn't have space for other sports, so everyone was involved in handball and had fun playing. I didn't take handball to a high level until my junior year of high school though, when I learned how much stronger other teams and people were. I wanted to be able to fight at that same level.

Earlier in high school, I had barely won a third of matches or passed the first round up. It wasn't until my senior year where I fought to the top to play against powerhouse schools and reached the finals. From there on, I did nothing but place in every tournament I joined and became someone to look out for.

Recently, I played in the USHA Junior One-Wall Small Ball Nationals (Co-Sponsored by ICHA) and it was amazing. Games ran smoothly, there was minimal arguing, and people gave a lot of support. It has been like that for most tournaments out of all the years I've played in ICHA tournaments.

Handball is competitive, fun, and challenging and that is why I continue to play this sport.
