The most memorable time when I played handball was when I played competitively for my high school team and became a part of the championship team twice. Early in my senior year during the handball season, I faced several losses so knew I had to step it up. I went to practice more often, I played harder, I would even throw my arm out sometimes, and when the time came, it paid off. I wouldn't face as many losses as I had before and I was able to lead a new starting team to a PSAL Championship.

The reason why handball interested me is because I found it to be more fun than any other sport and it was a way I could stay physically active. I liked the concept of handball and I would just play for fun up until my sophomore year in high school, which was when I started to participate in tournaments too. After playing competitively, I was able to feel my growth in handball and I grew to the point where my brother, who introduced me to the sport, can't even beat me anymore.

Handball is fun, intense, and thrilling. In the moments of close games, I start to feel the pressure, which intensified the game even more, but being able to push through the game feels really satisfying. I like this sport and continue to play it because of the thrill and satisfaction I feel while playing whether I win or lose because if it's fun, and that's all that matters.
